
name of the constructor (rather the full class name). public class X { public static void main(String[] args) { Constructor ctor = X.class.getDeclaredConstructor(); System.out.println("Name: " + ctor.getName()); X x = ctor.newInstance(); } } This should output: Name: X$1 The name I see is the Java class name, actually $1, since it seems that all the (non-static) class constructors, and the default constructor, are added to the class with that kind of name. If you want to access the constructor directly in the class, it depends on the language you're using. import fl 648931e174
