I am finishing my masters in English Studies at the moment and would like to continue to a PhD in English Studies with the University of Exeter. I have had a couple of face-to-face tests at the start of the process and I have a paper (in written form) that I will be giving at the interview. In addition, do I need to do any other tests / talk to any other departments before I start my PhD? A: You do have to get some sort of test in the way that UK universities expect. Your master's degree is officially recognised, so you don't need to take any more tests at the same level, but you'll need some sort of baseline of good English so that you can get on without too much work. There are a few ways to do this. If your department has a 'Personal Statement' form, you can get them to fill that out with information about your English level and give it to you to fill out with more information about yourself. In other cases, your department may give a 'Personal Statement' form for the interview. Or they may give you some sort of informal test, like writing a paragraph on something in English to answer some general questions about what you are interested in. You may not have to do anything like this, but unless you know which the interview is likely to be like, it is worth having something in advance. Q: How to access an Excel spreadsheet using c# which is inside a zip file in my SQL Server I have an excel file which I save using c# and then I save it inside a zip file. I want to access that excel file inside that zip file inside my SQL Server.
