You are "Thunder Kid", a brave scout with a knack for martial arts. You're playing on your own, in your own world, with your own rules. You're the hero. You're the legend. With your Bow, you're able to "pitch" your enemies, then "bump" them to send them flying across the screen. Your enemies always come back. This is "pitch and bump" gameplay. Throughout the game, you'll encounter your enemies, ranging from cute robots with big, blocky-looking bodies to huge robotic minotaurs with wings! With giant blasters, pick up health packs, and explosive crates, defeat every enemy you encounter to restore your energy. And when your energy gets low, you'll encounter a boss! Defeat them and you'll earn the achievement you're aiming for. You don't get paid, there's no story, and the credits roll automatically when you're through. The end. What you see and hear in this game is all you get. You don't get any kind of tutorial, you never get help in the game, and you can't save your game. Your only guide will be what you see. of major service cuts in mass transit The following is a chronological listing of major service cuts affecting major public mass transit service in some former and current United States and Canadian cities, organized by year and year-year-week. History 1979 February 7-11, 1979 Tucson, Arizona The San Antonio-San Diego/US-Mexico City line had been routed to Tucson, which had been operated by the joint Southwest Foothill Transit Company and Rio Grande Transit Authority since 1968. During the three-day strike, Rio Grande Transit Authority operated the local trolley from downtown Tucson to the University of Arizona at Tucson. April 3-5, 1979 Philadelphia, Pennsylvania An AARTA (American Association of Railroads through a Traffic Association) freight yard-switching demonstration was conducted in Philadelphia May 30 and 31, 1979. As reported on June 16, 1978, freight traffic through those yards would be diverted to another railroad. That new freight-routing system would require an interchange of trains within the yard. The AARTA movement was designed so as to allow heavy freight trains moving laterally with an average speed of through the yards to pass in either direction about once an hour. March 1979 Cleveland, Ohio Green and Yellow routes were discontinued on March 20, 1979, because of lack of ridership. With the intent of selling the city's interurban system to urban mass transit companies (upon enactment of "Aging-in-Place" legislation), the city tendered the municipal operation (as well as that of six of the system's seven shorter branch lines) to Pittsburgh's Rapid Transit Co. (RT) for $3.5 million. RT selected the heavily stressed Ohio Electric Railway for a new transit commission, consisting of former municipal president James G. Prothro and OEMC president Harry J. Price, to replace the CLE&LAC. June 30-July 4, 1979 Newark, New Jersey The SEPTA Glendale trolley ran from a terminus near the intersection of Walnut Avenue and Albany Avenue in West Orange, New Jersey, across the Orange County line, to a line near the intersection of the southernmost tip of the Elmcrest Road Extension (Edison) in Glen Ridge, New Jersey, and on to a terminus near the intersection of South Frelinghuysen Avenue (Route 27) and Elmcrest Road Extension (Edison) and Franklin Avenue (Route 28
