Assessment of the toxicity of metals (Cd, Hg, Cu, Pb and Zn) to Pseudokirchneriella subcapitata. The toxicity of metals (Cd, Hg, Cu, Pb and Zn) to the green alga Pseudokirchneriella subcapitata was investigated using growth inhibition tests. The growth of P. subcapitata was strongly affected by the presence of Cd, Pb and Zn in the culture medium, whereas Hg and Cu had a negligible effect. Both Al and Fe caused concentration-related inhibition in the algae. The growth of P. subcapitata was only affected by the presence of Pb in the medium. In this case, the EC(50) value for P. subcapitata was 130mg/l, and the generation time was 5.5 days. No signs of toxicity were detected when using Cd, Cu, Zn or Hg in the culture medium. Al did not affect the growth of P. subcapitata and even caused an inhibition in the control cultures, which was concentration-related. The highest concentrations of aluminium (500 and 1000mg/l) decreased the cell count to 1.7 and 1.3 billion cells/ml, respectively. This was attributed to a decrease in growth rather than to the loss of the alga. Cell count comparisons with control cultures indicate the growth inhibition was caused by the unavailability of necessary amounts of nitrogen and phosphorous rather than by toxic effects of aluminium.Q: string literal used as table name? In SQL Server I'm seeing a query which is creating a table using string as table name. e.g. (this query is from executing this command on query window) if object_id('tempdb.dbo.#my_table') is not null drop table #my_table create table #my_table(col1 int) select * from #my_table drop table #my_table First I thought, this is a wrong query but it is not. How can it be executed (this query is from an application)? A: When you run the first SQL, you actually are creating the table with the name #my_table, then droping it, and then trying to create it again. You should be able to get the following result: IF OBJECT_ID('
