Roblox is an online game platform and game creation system developed by Roblox Corporation that allows users to program games and play games created by other users. Created by David Baszucki and Erik Cassel in 2004 and released in 2006, the platform hosts user-created games of multiple genres coded in the programming language Lua. For most of Roblox's history, it was relatively small, both as a platform and a company. Roblox began to grow rapidly in the second half of the 2010s, and this growth has been accelerated by the COVID-19 pandemic. Roblox is free to play, with in-game purchases available through a virtual currency called Robux. As of August 2020, Roblox had over 164 million monthly active users, including more than half of all American children under 16. Although Roblox has received generally positive reviews from critics, it has faced criticism for its moderation, microtransactions, and exploitative practices directed toward children. - Description - I was standing there confused for a few seconds, then I continued to click "Watch now" button. So, maybe for a few hours or hours after that, I watched the video (just watched the real time part). There was some, but not nearly as much as I expected. Most of the movie was up to showing the usernames and a few seconds of them starting their games. It was originally uploaded to YT back in 2017 but I happened to catch it today. The videos I watched of the real time part were pretty terrible, but the guy was actually showing his gameplay for the game he was working on. The game was a racing game that looked decent. I didn't see any of the game names. I can't blame them, it's not like Roblox would show that. I can't remember seeing what game names were though. 3D models and other such cool stuff were being used in the video, which I saw for a second or two and could tell the guy has a large project, but that's the extent of the footage that I saw. there's a group on linkedin, which he met with, that have been interested in helping him out and make big projects together. I didn't catch a name but he was using python. So, a programming language is in the mix. I had seen a video about him a while ago, but I didn't hear anything about his projects.

The epidemiology of Salmonella Newport in humans and the identification of its antimicrobial resistance is not well established. In this study, the serological distribution of S. Newport isolates was studied and an indirect enzyme-linked immunosorbent assay (ELISA) was developed to detect non-O1/O2 somatic (O) antigen. Data were analysed on serotypes and sub-types, and year/quarter of isolation, by using the annual Animal and Human Salmonella Annual Reports published by the UK National Reference Centre for Salmonellae (NRCS) between 2000 and 2009. Between January 2000 and December 2009, the NRCS received 195 isolates of S. Newport from humans, 71 of which were non-typed. The annual frequency of isolation from humans ranged from 0.1% in 2000 to 0.8% in 2005 before increasing to 5.4% in 2006 and 1.6% in 2009. Of the 71 non-typed isolates received, 41 (57%) were serogroup D, and these comprised 48% of the total number of non-typed isolates. The serological data supports the detection of two clusters of non-O1/O2 somatic (O) antigen-positive (O+) S. Newport in humans, namely, one of a relatively rare serogroup D strain in England and Scotland, and another of the more common serogroup D in Wales. The latter strain was isolated in all years studied and comprised 52% of the total isolates. Antimicrobial susceptibility data available for 70/75 isolates confirmed that less than 40% of S. Newport isolates were resistant to three or more antimicrobials. The possibility of spread of a large clonal group of O+ isolates causing greater numbers of clinical infections needs to be explored. The present invention relates to a mobile node used in
