3. auto mode of the rs-485 controller can be set to start only after 10 minutes of non-operation, and kick-off of the rs-485 network only after half a year of non-usage. some environments may take longer for this mode to trigger. 4. the rs-485 network supports rs-232-based configuration of individual rs-485 network devices. the ip address can be changed, and the rs-485 controller remains operational when rs-232 data is received. i sic (south-east circuit) is the lowest level of rcd protection. a further transfer of protection between sic circuits is possible. the reliability and operating life of all batteries are therefore lower. the majority of siemens main products are protected by rcd-i protection. rcd-ii level of protection: same as rcd-i: circuit breaker with eco breaking capacity. up to 12 a. at a rated voltage (for example) more than 14 a should not be used. circuit breakers should be rcd-i or rcd-ii. endling. all circuit breakers with rcd level of protection. if not shown, all are rcd-i. +v short-circuit protection: up to 10 a. at a rated voltage more than 11 a. circuit breakers with an opening time of less than 0.5 s can be used as on load-closing circuit breakers without load short-circuit protection. if the circuit breaker in question is not protected by v short-circuit protection, an on load-closing circuit breaker is not suitable for use as a short-circuit release. the protection against short-circuit must be provided by one or several closing circuit breakers and in certain cases even a networked arrangement. midterm. after completing the installation circuit breakers must be tested with respect to the rcd level of protection. the following sequences should be considered: all circuit breakers with n, s, or h rated voltage should be tested as circuit breakers with normal voltage. if the circuit breaker can not be tested according to the..
