The goal of this Core is to provide the expertise and reliable assessment of dietary intake and energy expenditure, skeletal muscle and liver histology, cardiac geometry, and cardiac function using pressure or magnetic resonance based imaging techniques to provide physiological, biochemical, cellular and molecular characterization of the physiological parameters associated with nPt- induced toxicity. In combination with the Mouse phenotyping Core, this core will also provide the ability to measure whole body and organ weight and organ-to-body weight ratio. This core facility will ensure the acquisition of biochemical, histological and molecular data for all projects and will provide the technical expertise for the assessment of these data. The core will also provide the data necessary to generate preliminary data for the application of other core facilities and will provide a centralized facility for the conduct of the proposed studies. This core will optimize the use of resources and will enhance efficiency in the execution of the studies proposed.// Copyright 2009 the Sputnik authors.
