To follow Mr. Damjanov's discussion of the formation of the thymus, the white blood cells that fight infection, a dog dies at around the age of six months because the thymus no longer produces new cells of the immune system. 3th ed 13 The state of the nervous system is described, beginning with the three main subdivisions of the CNS, the brain and the spinal cord. The brain and spinal cord are organized into distinct compartments, each responsible for a separate function, including the sensory system, the motor system, and the autonomic system. While the brain and spinal cord are primarily responsible for processing sensory information and for controlling motor activity, the autonomic nervous system is responsible for the control of visceral organs such as the heart and the lungs. Muscular activity is controlled by the brain through the influence of the spinal cord, and is coordinated by a central pattern generator in the brainstem. The endocrine system, consisting of the pituitary gland and the thyroid gland, plays a role in controlling the body's hormonal activity. The endocrine system consists of several endocrine glands, each one regulated by a different endocrine cell. The endocrine glands are composed of a single cell, and are sometimes called diffuse endocrine glands.. Pathophysiology Pathophysiology. Ivan Damjanov. If there is no evidence of disease, the physician can be content with a diagnosis of idiopathic or primary disease. By contrast, in the presence of symptoms and signs, an etiological diagnosis can be made. A correct etiological diagnosis in turn can lead to a differential diagnosis and a patient-oriented therapeutic plan. The text describes the main parts of the anatomy of the body, the anatomy of the different tissues, and their
